CREATIVE IDEAS FOR

SLIDING BARN DOORS

Function and beauty at its best.

You might think that barn doors are strictly for farmhouses (hello, Joanna Gaines!), but believe it or not, this design element works beautifully in a variety of other spaces. Whether you're seeking to add a rustic touch to a modern kitchen or need a tasteful way to divide areas in a room, sliding barn doors are a versatile design solution.

FARMHOUSE DINING

A modern farmhouse in Watermill, New York, serves as a weekend getaway for a young family. The sliding barn door and gray wood flooring, reclaimed from a barn in Vermont, add contrast to the sculptural light fixture, which is vintage. The dining space in the 1910 rustic home is also furnished with a custom table paired with vintage chairs in a Pierre Frey fabric.

BRIGHT WHITE

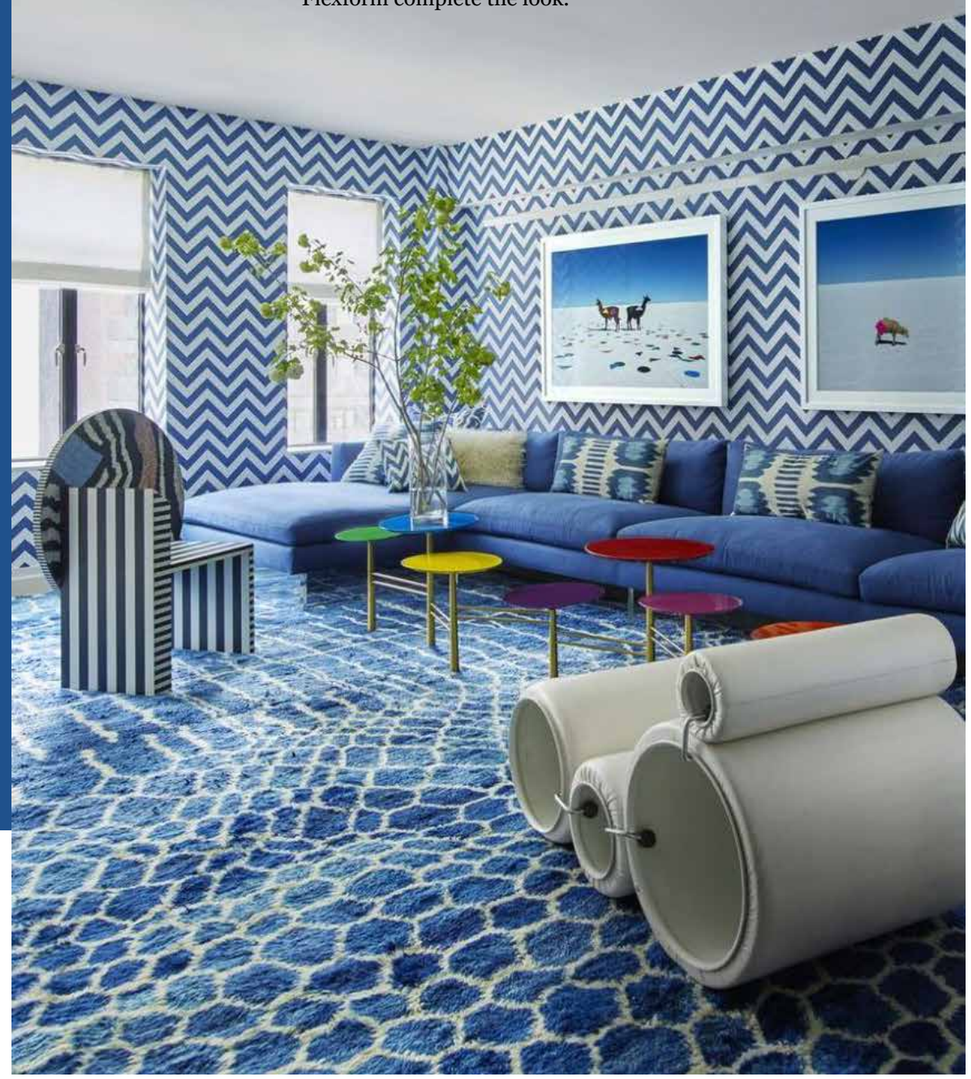
LIVING ROOM WALLPAPER IDEAS YOU'RE GOING TO LOVE

From florals to stripes, and everything in between.

DRAMATIC CHEVRON WALLPAPER

A palette of blues fills this Park Avenue living room designed by Kelly Behun. The bold chevron wallpaper by Schumacher complements the graphic carpet from Marrakech. A custom sectional covered in a Pindler linen, a cocktail table by Nada Debs, a striped chair by Kelly Behun Studio, and a vintage tubular chair by Joe Colombo for Flexform complete the look.



YELLOW WALLPAPER

In a Montana guesthouse by Ken Fulk, the charming yellow wallcovering is from Sloan Miyasato, the carpet by Mark Nelson Designs is topped with a buffalo-hide rug, and the artworks are from the 19th century.

TEXTURED GRAY WALLPAPER

A palette of grays can be full of visual interest, as shown in this living room design by Thom Filicia. The gray textured wallpaper serves as the perfect backdrop for a rectangular mirror and black faux leather crocodile screen.

MOROCCAN-INSPIRED WALLPAPER

Patterned blue wallpaper and cushion fabrics by Nancy Kintisch, along with sconces by Atelier de Troupe, add charm to a Moroccan-inspired room.

DAINTY FLORAL WALLPAPER

Sometimes, a simple floral wall covering is all that's needed to pull a living room together. The neutral design in this Paris space is beautifully layered with pops of red and blue.

BALI-INSPIRED WALLPAPER

Designer to the stars Martyn Lawrence Bullard crafted a gorgeous Malibu home inspired by Bali. For the living room, Lawrence Bullard settled on a Kneedler Fauchère paper painted by Kelly Holden.

TROPICAL WALLPAPER

Emily Henderson knows the key to incorporating a bold pattern in a living room design. This spacious living room features a bold green palm leaf wallpaper that adds contrast to the white Chesterfield-style sofa.

TEXTURED WALLPAPER

Jeffrey Bilhuber updated a Queen Anne manse in Tuxedo Park, New York, with a colorful palette of browns, reds, greens, and blues. The textured wallpaper in a neutral tone, the curtains, and the rug are all original to the house.

TROPICAL TURQUOISE WALLPAPER

What's not to love about this tropical-inspired living room filled with vibrant blues, including a textured wallpaper by Elitis. The living room in the Hamptons beach home, owned by the author of The Idea of Him, is furnished with a sofa by Calypso Home and slipper chairs upholstered in a fabric by Prismatek. The Orkney Island-style chair is from Room Service Home.

GRAPHIC BLUE WALLPAPER

Neiman Marcus Fashion Director Ken Downing was tapped to design a model apartment for the luxurious Hudson Yards building. He opted for a graphic blue wallpaper for the personality-packed living space.

SILK BURLAP WALLPAPER

Silk burlap wallpaper by Ralph Lauren adds to this room's sophisticated vibe. The Greenwich Village space, which is owned by Andy Cohen, also features a sofa, in a Maharam stripe by Paul Smith, and love seat, in a Ralph Lauren denim, from Classic Sofa of NY.

MILK PAINT

MILK PAINT

Before there were paint cans, there was milk paint. A tried-and-true favorite for many skilled designers, milk paint has been around for centuries. Although it's one of the world's most ancient forms of paint, the formula has been updated over time to adapt to modern needs. It is an eco-friendly, all-natural superstar in the world of paint and design, with zero VOC's or other toxins. Today, milk paint comes in a powdered form, and is known for its durability and velvety finish. With a wonderful variety of colors to choose from, milk paint is typically used on furniture or other wood surfaces.

To make sense of it all, Anne Thibeau, president of The Old Fashioned Milk Paint Company (and daughter to the inventor of powdered milk paint), breaks down what it is, how to use it, and where it works best.

WHAT IS MILK PAINT?

"Milk paint is an all-natural paint, consisting of two main ingredients: milk protein (casein) and crushed limestone. Together they form a very tough binder," Thibeau says. Milk paint gets its color from earth pigments, and clay or chalk is used as a filler to give the color more body. To give you a sense of how long it's been around, traces of milk paint were found in King Tut's tomb (and if that's not a testament to its durability, I don't know what is). From 1300 B.C. to now, much has changed. "[My grandfather] developed a formula for modern day milk paint in powder form, which you mix with water before use," Thibeau says. In an attempt to avoid using chemical preservatives of liquid paints, modern day milk paint was born. And nearly half a century later, SafePaint—a "more forgiving milk paint for non-porous surfaces" that adheres without a bonding agent—was invented. You can make your own milk paint at home, though ready-made powders make the process much more simple.

Milk Paint

HOW DO YOU USE IT?

Milk paint is typically used on walls, furniture, woodwork, and metal. Unlike oil or latex paints, you can paint virtually any surface—including wood, glass, masonry, drywall, and plaster—all without sanding down the area or using primer. But take caution:
“It sinks into a surface and is extremely difficult to remove, curing over time like concrete,” Thibeau says. (Remember King Tut’s tomb?) If you choose a milk paint option that does require a primer, Thibeau recommends mixing the powder with a bonding agent, and using that as a first coat.

MILK PAINT VS. CHALK PAINT

Milk paint and chalk paint are oftentimes confused, but they are made with different ingredients and each have their own distinct look. While milk paint is all-natural and contains zero VOC’s, chalk paint is chemically-based. Thibeau emphasizes that this is a common point of confusion, explaining that “Chalk paint has a somewhat chalky appearance that can be reminiscent of milk paint.”

If you’re looking for authentic milk paint, it should never be sold in liquid form. “Check the fine print!” Thibeau urges.
